Martha Curtis is a concert violinist who learned how to co-exist with epileptic seizures even from the stage.

The CBS show 60 Minutes covered the amazing story of Martha's love of music and determination to be seizure free, convincing a team of doctors to remove much of her right brain. Now seizure free, Martha shares her story of co-existing with adversity and not giving in to what society deems a "horrible life."

In a moving lecture/performance, Martha shares her belief that everybody needs a chance to touch beauty and order because armed with beauty and order, the human spirit can persist through all misery. Martha is incredibly articulate and passionate about her music. She has recently performed for the Kilbourn Series at the Eastman School of Music.
